Relay Transductions

Margit Galanter

*

*

*

Transduction:

It’s a process whereby material can change into a new medium. By working with the elements from one medium, and then abstracting enough so that they can inform and synthesize into the next. Taking a lived encounter, for example, using as material for a dance of that experience; or taking the quality of lines of a poem, and using it as a source or basis for an inquiry.

I develop a discipline and approach with the material and let it blossom.Transduction is literally the act of converting energy from one form to another, or transferring genetic material- there is an implication of a kind of seed and the ability for it to become a new thing in a new body, aided by epigenetics.

Trans: transfer/translate/transmogrify. implies the nature of the complexity of the whole and that multiplicity being a source of fascination and potentiality.

Duce: to lead

we let the material lead over

we let the multiplicity lead us to new territory.